BURIAL OF A POPE.

Impressive Ceremonials That Follow the Death of the Pentiff. When the death of the reigning pope iraws near, the cardinal secretary of state informs the dean of the sacred college, who summons his colleagues to the residence of the dying man. The cardinal vicar issues orders that prayers be offered in the Roman churches; the cardinal penitentiary attends the bedside of

To belong to this most select circle of the pope, to whom the sacristan of the pope's chapel administers extreme unction. As soon as may be after death has occurred the body must be formally recognized by the cardinal camerlingo who, in obedience to an ancient custom first knocks thrice on the door of the bedchamber. Getting no answer, he enter and taps thrice with a silver mallet on the dead man's forehead and thrice calls him by name. No response coming, the camerlingo declares that the pope i dead. Thenceforth the camerlingo is the most important of the cardinals, having charge of the preparations for the conclave, of the government of the palac the names in parentheses indicating and of the transactions with the repre sentatives of foreign powers, to whom he officially announces the pope's death The papal guard of Swiss halberdiers attends him when he goes out; his arms are stamped on the medal of the vacant see; he takes an inventory of the propdead pontiff's papers. But in order to prevent him from oversa pping his authority the sacred college appoints three cardinals—a bishop, a priest and a dea-con—who are called the heads of the orders, and whose business it is to oversee his acts. They serve for three days, being replaced by others chosen in rota-
